Honigman's tax service office can save you up to $30,000 in the next two years Article 1 June 23, 2013 - 12:03am The tax law changes that are on the way can have a dramatic impact on the personal finances of business owners in more ways than just deducting business expenses. The outcome of those changes, however, will have a major impact on the bottom line of a firm. Changes to the Affordable Care Act and the tax law could mean increased healthcare and income taxes for some business owners, according to Michael J. Miller, president of the Chicago-based tax practice of Honigman Miller Schwartz and Cohn LLP. The law will also have a significant impact on retirement accounts, Miller said. "The Affordable Care Act changes could make your healthcare premiums go up," he said. "Not only that, but there's a cap on how much you can deduct for healthcare. But what that could mean is if you're in the middle of a deductible and you're going to be hit with a big tax bill, you may opt to have a procedure earlier than you normally would so you don't have to pay the tax bill." The Affordable Care Act also will affect the taxation of retirement accounts, Miller said. As a result of the changes, many types of retirement accounts – 401(k) and similar plans, Individual Retirement Accounts (IRAs), and the like – will not be able to be rolled over to a new account without a 10% penalty. These retirement accounts are already taxed on a tax deferred basis, meaning that profits in the accounts are not taxed until the money is withdrawn and used. Miller said that by eliminating the tax deferral, the additional tax burden will be added to the cost of the account, making it less attractive for individuals to use the accounts to save money for retirement. "In other words, the increase in tax could mean that people who are going to be saving for retirement, they're not going to be able to save as much as they'd like," he said. Not only will there be a tax 82157476af
